Kevin Hall's Feb. 22 letter criticizes developer Darius Assemi and how his company is affecting air quality, but he ignores what the California Health Sciences University will give to this community.

The California Health Sciences University has the potential to address the shortage of health care services offered in the Valley and provide an answer to our high unemployment and poverty rate by training area students. More local educational opportunities will help reverse brain drain.

Farming and development are essential pieces of the Valley's economic health. There must be a way to accommodate both and improve air quality at the same time. Instead of criticizing a local builder who has long shown a commitment to bettering Fresno, Mr. Hall should work with Mr. Assemi in helping solve our air quality problems.
