If I recall Darius Assemi wants to build the California Health Science University up in the foothills near Friant on property he already owns. This is just going to create more traffic and pollution through Friant.

A better idea would be for him to purchase one of the already built large empty buildings on Fulton Street that would be centrally located for the hundreds of students. Not only would this be great for downtown, but it would also be an opportunity for new small businesses such as shops and restaurants. It might also be an incentive for young people to move into the fairly new lofts and apartments downtown.

Having recently read numerous letters in The Fresno Bee regarding the pros and cons of opening Fulton Street to traffic, I think this maybe something to think about.
