

Another elite power grab

April 5, 2014

<http://www.fresnobee.com/2014/04/05/3860565/another-elite-power-grab.html>

I must comment on your April 2 editorial on global warming. The "overwhelming evidence" is really not "overwhelming" nor is it really "evidence" in a scientific sense.

The computer models used to predict all types of climate change are now proven to be clearly in error. The models were built to "prove" a preconceived result and have been proven over the last 25 years to be just plain wrong. To call the result scientific is an abomination used by elites to further their own ends -- namely more power over individuals' lives, liberties and finances.

Many members of the U.N. commission have resigned, including economist Richard Tol of the University of Sussex, who said "the drafts are too alarmist, it is pretty damn obvious that there are positive impacts of climate change, even though we are not always allowed to talk about them." He reflects the thoughts of thousands of true scientists who say that the so-called "evidence" does not support the conclusions. Just another power grab by the elites -- not a good idea.

Ed Foraker

Sanger