Fresno State officially launched its Student Cupboard at an event Monday afternoon.

Students crammed into the rear of the Post Harvest building at Chestnut and Barstow avenues on the northeast side of campus Monday to hear university leaders speak during the opening ceremony.

The Student Cupboard, which will receive food donations from the Fresno Community Food Bank and food drives, will be open to university students Monday through Friday offering free food and personal hygiene products as long as the university itself is open during the year, according to project coordinator Jessica Medina.
