

Nowhere Is Safe From California Drought—Not Even Beverly Hills

By Jim Carlton

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif.—This enclave of movie-star glamour, famous for its tree-lined boulevards and manicured yards, is starting to turn heads for another reason: dying grass and ripped-out lawns.

Beverly Hills has been identified by state officials as one of California's biggest urban water guzzlers and, under rules approved late Tuesday, ordered to cut its consumption by 36% or face fines up to $10,000 per violation.
