

Drought threatens livelihood of California beekeepers

Second-generation beekeeper Mike Brandi of Los Banos expects to bring in less than half of his usual honey yield this year. The varroa mite, pesticides and colony collapse disorder have been threatening beehives nationwide for years, but the fourth year of California's drought is making bee survival a challenge. Video by Brittany Peterson / McClatchy

Brittany Peterson McClatchy

Comments

Join the Discussion

The Fresno Bee is pleased to provide this opportunity to share information, experiences and observations about what's in the news. Some of the comments may be reprinted elsewhere on the site or in the newspaper. We encourage lively, open debate on the issues of the day, and ask that you refrain from profanity, hate speech, personal comments and remarks that are off point. Thank you for taking the time to offer your thoughts.

Terms of Service